The County Attorney Enters a Nolle in the Case of the State vs. D. A. January.

Several months ago a young man named D. A. January was arrested on the complaint of Mr. Paul. Dammann of this city who charged him with obof this city who charged him with obtaining money under false pretenses. On the strength of a telegram from St. Louis authorizing January to draw on A. McKinley for the sum of $30 he drew two drafts of $30 each, one of which was cashed by Capt. Alexander and the other by Messrs Murphy & Dammann. The draft cashed by Capt. Alexander was honored and the other was returned from a bank in other was returned from a bank in St. Louis without being paid. Under these circumstances January was ar-rested and confined in the county jail until yesterday when County Attorney W. S. court noise yesterday afternoon, and for a while there was great excitement in the neighborhood.

A horse attached to a buggy

A norse standed to a buggy came running around the corner of Belkmap street and struck out across the square. At the corner of Main street it ran into a team hitched to a wagon belonging to a colored man named Leonard Brown, which became frightened and ran off down East Weatherford street. ran off down East Weatherford street. The horse attached to the buggy came loose at this point and was caught. The buggy was almost a total wreck. In the meantime the runaway team was flying down Weatherford street. Mr. Seth Hudson, a horse dealer, was sitting on his horse near by and putting whip to his animal set out in pursuit, with the crowd yelling encouragement as he passed. A great crowd watched the chase and saw some wagons in front of the runaways pulling out of the way. The team kept a straight road and had crossed the Santa Fe railroad bed, when they were overhauled. Mr. Hudson used his whip over the face of the near horse until he checked them enough to seize the bridle and brought them to a standstill without any damage to horse or warm. chough to setze the bridle and brought them to a standstill without any damage to horse or wagon. He brought them back to the square in triumph and the owner "set 'em up." The buggy belonged to Turner's livery stable and had turned over this side of the old cemetery, throwing out two gentlemen who were driving it, and the horse ran away with the results stated.

The Water Works Question in Colorado City-A Mass Meeting. Correspondence of the Gazette.

Colorado December 11.—Last Satur-day night a mass meeting was held at the court-house to take action on some amendments of the franchise of the Seven Wells Water-works company. These amendments which refer to the These amendments which refer to the control of the hydrants by the city authorities, and the charges for use of water for sprinkling the streets, were not clearly stated and understood at the time the franchise was granted. They are very important to the proper working of the water-works company, and are antagonized by the Artesian Well company. The latter company claims a charter under the old city government, and is disposed to question the rights of the former as now granted. There was quite a larg-attendance of the tax-payers of Colorado, and much interest manifested in attendance of the tax-payers of Colorado, and much interest manifested in the discussion of the subject under consideration. For the Artesian Well company Gen. G. W. James was the principal speaker. He opposed the adoption of the amendments on the ground of economy to the citizens, and claimed the artesian well would supply ample water for the use of the city. Also that it was carried on by home capital, while that of the water works company was foreign, which latter reason appears to be the chief ground of complaint.

of complaint,
Messrs, A. W. Dunn and N. S.
Sherwin spoke in the interests of the water works company. They think the artesian well supply of water to be inadequate for the use of the city, and argue that a permanent water supply would attract much capital to Col-orado. They were in favor of liberal franchise rights to the water works franchise rights to the water works company.

After a vote was taken, which was claimed to be a tie and by others in favor of the adoption of the amendments, it was finally agreed to leave the matter to the action of the council.

As a citizen of Colorado, and feeling an interest in her continued prosperity, also as correspondent of the GAZETTE, I am in a position to state these facts for our people here to consider.

Now can the Artesian Well company assure the people of Colorado that they control capital sufficient to earry these different enterprises through to completion? Can they promise to farmish 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 gallons of water per day, if needed for use? If so, then they can afford to put in chaims for support.

If not, then they should not oppose, but as citizens of Colorado extend a hearty welcome to the men who have the means and herve to accomplish the means and nerve to accomplish the means and nerve to accomplish this grand work. I am not a partisan admirer or advecate of either scheme individually, but wish to see Colorado bloom and flourish. I would not an-bloom and flourish. I would not antagonize either enterprise, and had rather rejoise to see both succeed.

Col. W. S. J. Adams, one of our leading attorneys, died to-day. His death was totally unexpected and will occasion grief to a host of relatives and friends. He was taken sick at Abillene, where he was engaged in important legal business. He returned home, as the seamel proves, to die. Another as the seamel proves, to die. Another as the sequel proves, to die. Another troubled spirit at rest. In the grave his faults will be buried, and the memory of his talents and virtues will not soon be forgotten.
